

Graduate School Admissions Test Preparation Resources

Similar to the Scholastic Assessment Test (SAT) and the American College Testing (ACT) assessments often used for undergraduate admissions considerations, many graduate school programs require or encourage various standardized assessment scores for admissions considerations. Below is a list of the most common graduate level assessments administered as well as links to their registration websites. Determining which assessments are required or encouraged for admission into the graduate programs you will be applying to is crucial.

Once you have determined which assessment is necessary for your education goals, it is important to prepare yourself to earn the best score you can on a given assessment. The YHC Zell and Shirley Miller Library provides various resources, both virtually and on paper, for test preparation for a wide variety of graduate level admissions assessments.

Learning Express Library
